CREATE YOUR OWN
HANGING BASKET

GRANGEKnows

A hanging basket is a beautiful touch to accent any home and garden. With a variety of plant combinations available at your local Grange Co-op, you can arrange an eye-catching basket in just a couple minutes. Reference the video included to see just how easy it is to arrange your own basket or read more in the details below.

Choose the type of plants you prefer for the space the basket will be hung. It's important to choose plants that are collectively tolerant to either heat, shade, or both, depending on your choice location. While you want a variety of plant types in your basket, it's important to make sure all are cohesive and will thrive together in the environment they are placed.

When choosing your plants, note the full-grown size and shape on their plant tag. Depending on the type of look you prefer, a combination of clumping plants with trailing plants can create a mixture of color and texture that will create an eye-catching basket well into the growing season. It's important to recognize a common mistake when creating hanging baskets: over planting your basket. Referencing our video, you'll see Kraig is using a 14" basket and planting 3 Calibrachoa starts in it. Each plant will grow very large and you want to avoid overcrowding for the health and overall appearance of your basket.

Next, if your space allows it, the larger the basket, the more volume of water your plants will hold. Because a larger basket holds more soil, it will retain more water, meaning the less frequently you'll need to water your plants. In the heat of summer, small baskets can not only require watering daily, but possibly multiple times a day.

WHICH SEEDS ATTRACT

CERTAIN BIRDS TO YOUR YARD

GRANGEKnows

Whether you are trying your hand at feeding wild birds for the first time or you have been at it for some time, you might not be getting the kinds of birds you want at your bird feeder. Many people don't realize that birdseed doesn't offer a one-size-fits-all solution to all species of birds. Knowing the types of seeds a bird likes will help you have greater success at getting the visitors that you want. Our bird food chart will provide you with some basic information about feeding popular bird species on the west coast.

A UNANIMOUS FAVORITE

One type of seed that nearly all birds like is sunflower, which comes in three different types — gray, striped, and black oil. While most birds will happily eat all three, black oil sunflower seeds have the higher percentage of oil, the thinnest hulls, and are a good buy if you're looking for cheap bird seed. You might feed pure black oil sunflower seed if you want to attract a variety of birds to your yard.

You can feed finches all three types of sunflowers too. The birds use their strong beaks to quickly open the seeds and retrieve the soft, nutritious interior. As an added convenience, you can give them hulled sunflower seeds or sunflower chips. The smaller pieces fit through the holes in finch feeders, and there's no mess or waste.

GRAIN ELEVATOR, CIRCA 1947

In 1941, L.H. Gallatin, one of the early members, loaned funds to build a feed warehouse. Basic grinding and mixing equipment were installed, and the Co-op began mixing feed.

The total tonnage of grain produced in the valley was much less in those days than now, but many more farmers grew some grain as a part of their farming operation. Don Bohnert, a long-time Co-op member and a former director, says farmers were getting squeezed when it came time to sell their grain.

"There were two or three seed cleaning outfits in Medford, and they'd go out in the spring of the year, and I think they more or less had their heads together on what they were going to pay for grain crops," he says. The Co-op's involvement in feed manufacturing and local grain purchasing provided stability in the market.

Feed sales - and membership - continued to grow. By February 1946, membership had climbed to 703. In that same month members voted 95-15 to build a grain elevator. Earl Weaver, former general manager, pledged to members that the Co-op "should have available for you most of the things that you need in the operation of your farm, and it is my desire as manager of your association to expand the facilities until that goal is accomplished." The elevator was completed by the summer of 1947.
