PLANTS THAT REPEL BUGS FROM THE HOME OR GARDEN

GRANGEKnows

Insects are a problem for gardeners on any scale, from a few raised beds to a large plot. Some pests feed directly on your vegetables, while others go after the leaves, stems, or roots. Any damage to the plant reduces vigor and productivity, so you don't get the quality or volume you want from your crops. No matter what types of veggies you grow, eventually you'll need to use some type of pest control.

HOW COMPANION PLANTS FOR GARDENS KEEP PESTS AWAY

Some plants function as a natural insect repellent by exhibiting strong scents. Others release chemicals that repel, trap, or even kill insects. Some companion plants work by attracting beneficial insects that, in turn, eliminate unwanted insects. For example, ladybugs are predators with an insatiable appetite for aphids. Planting calendula, marigold, or yarrow in your garden to attract ladybugs will help keep aphids out of your nearby vegetables.

Chemical pesticides remain the primary choice of global farmers. But there are worries that consuming too many foods containing chemical pesticides can have serious consequences for our health. Learning to take advantage of companion planting for pest control can reduce or eliminate the need for chemical pesticides. You can find most of what you need at the garden center. Make a list of the vegetables you will plant and find the right companion plants that repel bugs common to those veggies.

PETS WITH SEASONAL ALLERGIES

GRANGEKnows

Pets experience seasonal allergies, much like we do, and they can be in pain, and unable to voice their discomfort to get the help they need. As pet owners, it is our responsibility to ensure our pets' well-being. To do this, we need to be able to tell when our pets are suffering from seasonal allergies.

In this blog, we'll explore what causes seasonal allergies in pets, the common symptoms, and diagnosing and managing these allergies.

WHAT CAUSES SEASONAL ALLERGIES IN PETS?

Seasonal allergies, also known as atopic dermatitis or atopy, occur when a pet's immune system reacts to environmental allergens. These allergens include:

- Pollen: Grasses, trees, and flowers release pollen that can cause allergic reactions in pets. Symptoms often worsen during specific times of the year.
- Mold spores: Mold and mildew thrive in damp environments, releasing spores that can trigger allergic reactions in pets, especially during wet seasons.

- Dust mites: These microscopic creatures thrive in warm, humid environments and can be present year-round, but their activity may increase in certain seasons.

- Fleas: While fleas are not strictly a seasonal allergen, they are more rampant in warmer months and can cause allergic reactions through their bites.
